Let's be honest and admit that not much is actually known about the Gundestrup Cauldron. It is certain that anyone with some psychic ability beyond the mundane level would be able to pick up on the negativity surrounding this item. To find out the details as to why, the author likes to use the Rota in order to have verity and the ability to double check the findings by the ancient reduction methods inherent in the Rota. Although there are better powers available to access the akas more head-on without Tarot hieroglyphs, those who use it know that it just accesses the INTELLIGENCES of the Trump cards taken from a sacred, initiatory priesthood. Anyways, back to the cauldron.

The reading was brief because of the nature of the piece and its level of interest to the clairvoyant. The Nordic ruler would cleanse himself with water from this bowl before killing people in order to purify himself from the atrocious act. It was not a good sign to see this bowl. There is a dread associated with it. The accepted date is probably close enough, since the clairvoyant will only brush over a finding like this particular one and exact date will make very little difference to occultism. It depicts Odin and the art on the bowl is Wotanism 100%. This bowl was a part of their sanctuary. It was used in other types of moral cleansing by placing the hands in it. If someone was brought to their court and at some point during the procedures, saw this item, the person would immediately know his fate. It may have also been used for mercy killing of the terminally ill. Perhaps this was not the brightest ornament during the Nordic culture.

What we may consider artistic may have actually been utilized for more than mere decorative purposes by the original owners. And now it just sits there doing nothing.

Montezuma (Moctezuma II) the last Aztec ruler has been misrepresented by history it seems. The clairvoyant of Access the Akashic zine has taken a look at this particular figure in time and discovered something very deep is there. He was a kind, generous person. His ancestry may in fact be Mongolian (up until now the author believes Machu Picchu was created by Mongolians, more on that later). He had spiritual knowledge of vast things (this translates to quite a great deal of occult learning). They hid the gold (as we have already known). There is definitely more to the story than what is recorded, to say the least.

The Aztecs of Montezuma believed in sorcery and they were a clan which still survives. They were palace builders and they certainly wouldn't treat people like the xtians did. They may be the remnant or even direct lineage of the golden age of the Mayans (definitely not the sadistic, torturers of Chichen Itza). Maybe it correlates to the Quiché but they called themselves in their own language by a different word. It's just so deep that the High Priestess of Tarot has made a big impression about this. It's very important and more looking will be done on it. Their fate fell under the Inquisition so not much will be said about those details because negative things are not focused upon here. But take a good look at Montezuma (Moctezuma II) the final Aztec, and realize not even half of the truth has been told about them. Consider with awe and understanding about how very important they are to our lost histories! They were definitely not indigenous tribesmen whatsoever and that was very clear from the start of this initial reading.

Here is the author's initial look at Baalbeck and the mystery of its massive pillars. It appears to be 50-60,000 years old. It was a big stone structure that is not fully there now. It was very glamorous in its day. It was quite an edifice in fact. They brought the stones from 30 miles away. They engraved on the stones their temple name and things. In order to complete the task they decided they would do it and did not turn back. 70,000 of their men pushed the pillars on rollers. Eight days and nights straight of total work. They had some kind of ancient machine that assisted pushing by levers. It may have been the world capital or center in those times. Were they cyclops? The author not certain yet, but it is a possibility. On the other hand, they were not giants but very strong people who stood six feet tall. They could push 300 pounds with their bare hands. This was during an age long gone, long before the ice age. It was a living hell to construct this structure but they did not waver in determination. Let's put it in perspective: They were great employers! So much more could be looked at here and someday soon it shall be done.
